Contract Ordering Information

B1. Microscopes and accessories typically routine in industry and life science

Scopes in this category have been noticed as : Almost always stereoscopic, used heavily for long periods, high quality with very little curvature or aberration, numerical aperture higher than most student scopes, coarse adjustment approx. 13 mm/rotation and fine adjustment approx. 0.1 mm/rotation, magnification typically 10X to 1500X for observation, tilt to at least 45 degrees or have ergonomic adjustment equivalent.

B2. Microscopes and accessories typical for research in industry and life science

Scopes in this category have been noticed as : Compound Inverted, almost no curvature or aberration permissible, relatively expensive of all categories, image quality is the most important consideration, used moderately, usually has three or more objective lenses, accessories for photomicrography, capable of phase contrast and fluorescence studies, vibration resistant, dark field, simple polarization, frequently used with photo video systems, some models are motorized, tilt to at least 45 degrees or have ergonomic adjustment equivalent.

B3. Microscopes and accessories typical for education in industry and life science

Scopes in this category have been noticed as : Monocular or stereo very mild curvature or aberration is permissible, the least expensive of all categories, for student use, not heavily used, usually has three objective lenses, uses a limited number of filters, has a built in or free standing light source, possible teaching heads, mostly brightfield use, usual magnification typically under 1000 for observation tilt exceeds 40 degrees.

B4. Macroscopic (Zoom Microscopes), typical for all applications

Scopes in this category have been noticed as Used for gross macroscopic examination such as fine machine parts and plant structures, used in quality control or screening, usually stereoscopic, moderately used, general magnification range far less than that of microscopes, frequently with built-in light sources.

B5.

Example of sub-distinctions also capable of being awarded within a general equipment classification ; polarizing, monocular, stereoscopic, inverted, confocal, fluorescence, patch clamp, surgical, and others.
